DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Fazenbaker House is located on the eastern side of Jackson Mountain Road approximately one mile south of Lonaconing. The "L" shaped frame house is indeteriorated condition but has been subjected to little alteration. Four frame outbuildings and a barn are located near the farmhouse.

The house is two and one-half stories tall, three bays wide on the gable end facade (western elevation) and two bays deep. The ell extends from the southern elevation. The frame building is covered with german siding with a covering of insul brick siding on the facade and southern elevation. The gable ends are covered with imbricated wooden shingles at the attic level. The building rests on a high rubble stone foundation. The gabled roof is covered with bands of square and imbricated slate shingles. Triangular pediments are located on the gable ends.

A wraparound veranda on the facade and northern elevation has a rounded corner on the northwest. The hipped roof of the veranda is supported by tapered wooden Roman Doric columns. A shed roofed porch on the eastern elevation has been enclosed. Windows are 1/1 sash with drip moldings. The attic level window on the facade is a round-headed 1/1 sash. The main entrance, located in the center of the facade, has a one light transom and is surmounted by a drip molding. The door is missing. Three interior chimneys of white glazed brick have corbeled caps. The cap of the chimney nearest the facade is missing.

Three outbuildings abut the enclosed porch on the eastern elevation of the house. Two of these frame structures are covered with german siding, the other is covered with board and batten siding. The outbuildings have gabled roofs. The board and batten covered structure rests on a high random ashlar stone foundation. A shed roofed outbuilding to the south of the farmhouse is covered with vertical boards.

A frame barn to the south of the farmhouse is covered with vertical boards and tar paper. It rests on a high rubble stone foundation on the western and northern elevations. A door on the northern elevation of the barn slides open on metal runners. The gabled roof is covered with tar paper. A shed roofed addition is on the southern elevation of the barn. The ruins of another barn are located to the west of the farmhouse.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Although a common house plan, the Fazenbaker house is distinguished for its surviving finishes, such as the slate roof, shingle siding, glazed brick chimneys and wrap-around porch. It appears to have been a fairly elegant house.
